User interfaces AutoCAD is a desktop application, but it is also available as a web app that can be used directly from a web browser. Key user interfaces of AutoCAD are:

- The tool palette: A user chooses which tools (or toolsets) will be used to create the drawing and to draw the lines, arcs, and curves. Each tool has two menus on the top menu bar. One menu is to specify the drawing area (rectangular, polar, or freehand) and the other menu allows for tool selection (toolsets). When a tool or toolset is chosen, the user chooses a drawing element (e.g., a line, arc, or curve) and indicates the toolsets needed to create the desired shape.

The Help menu contains help information about AutoCAD and its toolsets.
- The tool bar: The tool bar contains a variety of tools that are used to draw and edit drawing elements. Each tool can be toggled on and off, allowing the user to work in either mode.

- The status bar: This displays information about the drawing, such as the current zoom level, status of tools, and the state of the drawing area.
- The workspace: The workspace displays the properties of the current drawing element (e.g., the current line width, its color, the current angle of the line, the current location of a point, etc.).

I'm using jQuery's.on() method to fire an event when the button is clicked. `$('.my_class').on('click', function(event){ //do something console.log('clicked'); }); $('.my_class').on('click', '#my_button', function(event){ console.log('clicked'); });` Why is the second method not working, while the first one works fine? Is there something that I'm missing? A: You have given two events, so you have to bind that to both events `$('.my_class').on('click', function(event){ //do something console.log('clicked'); }); $('.my_class').on('click', '#my_button', function(event){ console.log('clicked'); });` Q: How to debug a script that goes to sleep?
